

Nine schools are located outside reach of the storm surge, providing shelter spots for residents.

University of New Haven is one of these schools, located in proximity to the storm surge zones along the eastern side of the city. Many facilities on the UNH campus could serve as shelter and aid locations, such as the Peterson Library and the Beckerman Recreation Center.

Also in proximity to the flooding along the West River is the Allington Fire Station, which can provide emergency medical service.

The city's police department is located in the center of town, not far from the flooding area along the southeastern side of town.